It has required an additional title to such eminent distinc- but two hands to manage and conduct the I will state facts-such as I have within my own knowledge—giving reference also to witnesses of unumpeachable credibility, and then furnish brief views of the topography, soils-healthiness of the section of the county to which I allude, and of which I venture a prediction, fifty years hence, to be verified—that this very region of country now held in low estimate, will be "the garden-spot of Tennessee,

Twelve years ago, (1848.) I purchased some six or seven thousand acres of the "Barrens" of Coffee county. Upon one of the tracts, well known as the "McMurtry Place," is an old apple and plum orchard. McM. settled there about the year 1801over sixty years ago - and set out an orchard of several hundred trees, apples, peaches, plums, etc. The place is five miles north of funchester. Fires, by which this country has often been damaged, overran the McM. place, and many years since destroyed the nost of the fruit trees planted in 1804 to 1806.

There remains, however, of the original orchard about a dezen trees-large and handsome trees-which I know have yielded a their knowledge these trees have borne knowledge extending over a period of from twenty to forty years-about every third or lifth year, having a full yield. In 1861, and us the following anecdote of Senator Parin this year, and I think also in 1864, some TERSON, of this State: of these trees were laden as I never saw trees in Ohio or elsewhere.

The late venerable patriarch and pioneer, DANDEL HARPOOL (deceased in April last, and 94 years), lived and died upon his land idjoining Wayside, and but a mile and a half from the McMunry place. He often told me that fruit had been yelded from those trees every year for more than half a catory. This fact cannot be doubted.

These are not engrafted trees, but seed-lings; two of the trees yielded sweet, the others, apples of pleasant acidity, and they are not degenerated into "little bullet-sized fruit," hard and knotty, but full, even and round, and hang on till maturity. They make good cider and bake well. The peach trees were long since destroyed.

As to the healthiness-the facts already stated answer that question, at least in so far a fruit trace are concerned. But look at alive to the very ends of the twigs, foliage green-freer mow, in their venerable age, om decay, roughness, dead-wood, withered the Northern orchards. These have never been pruned, at least there are no marks to indicate such an operation. It is rowded with small limbs and twigs should venated by pruning, and thereafter yield much larger apples were they thoroughly praned-and yet more, if richly undeked Other old orchards in this vicinity are noted for frequent abundant yield, and [I believe,] annual crop to some extent, I doubt not that the fallest apple-tree in the United States, is in this county. I must oldain its measurement. I estimate it to be sixty-feet high, and not more than fiftees inches in diameter, long straight trunk, with moderate top; as to bearing, I know noth-

It is a reproach, a shame, that, with the fact so generally known of the productive ness of fruit trees in Middle Tennesse, and especially in these highlands, that such insignificant orchards are to be seen; rarely hundred trees upon a place. A dozen apple trees by the garden and some peach trees in fence-corners, make an orchard, or an apolo gy, wyich ought not to be accepted.

As to mulching of fruit trees-such a kindness is barely heard of in Ternessee. The the work, and will be read with great internearest approach to it is by throwing some est.
